ACTION man

FIELD COMMANDER
with 'talking' radiopack

Action Man Field Commander is the 'eyes and ears' of his unit. Operating usually in very forward positions, he must observe the slightest change in the enemy's position and plan his field tactics accordingly.

He must also keep in close radio contact with HQ and other units. This is where his Field Radio Pack becomes such a vital item of equipment. It gives the Commander immediate warning of enemy attacks, minefields, snipers, and also instructs him what targets to attack, their range and location. Other radio signals tell him when to hold fire, await further orders, or camouflage his positions against possible air strikes.

The radio pack can be worn on the Field Commander's back with headphones and microphone attached, or operated separately. With its own loop aerial and batteries, it is completely self-contained. In bad weather the canvas cover should be unrolled for extra protection.

Sometimes it is necessary to maintain complete radio silence to avoid giving away your position. At such times a Field Commander relies on hand signals or whispered orders, keeping a watch out with his binoculars for enemy movements.

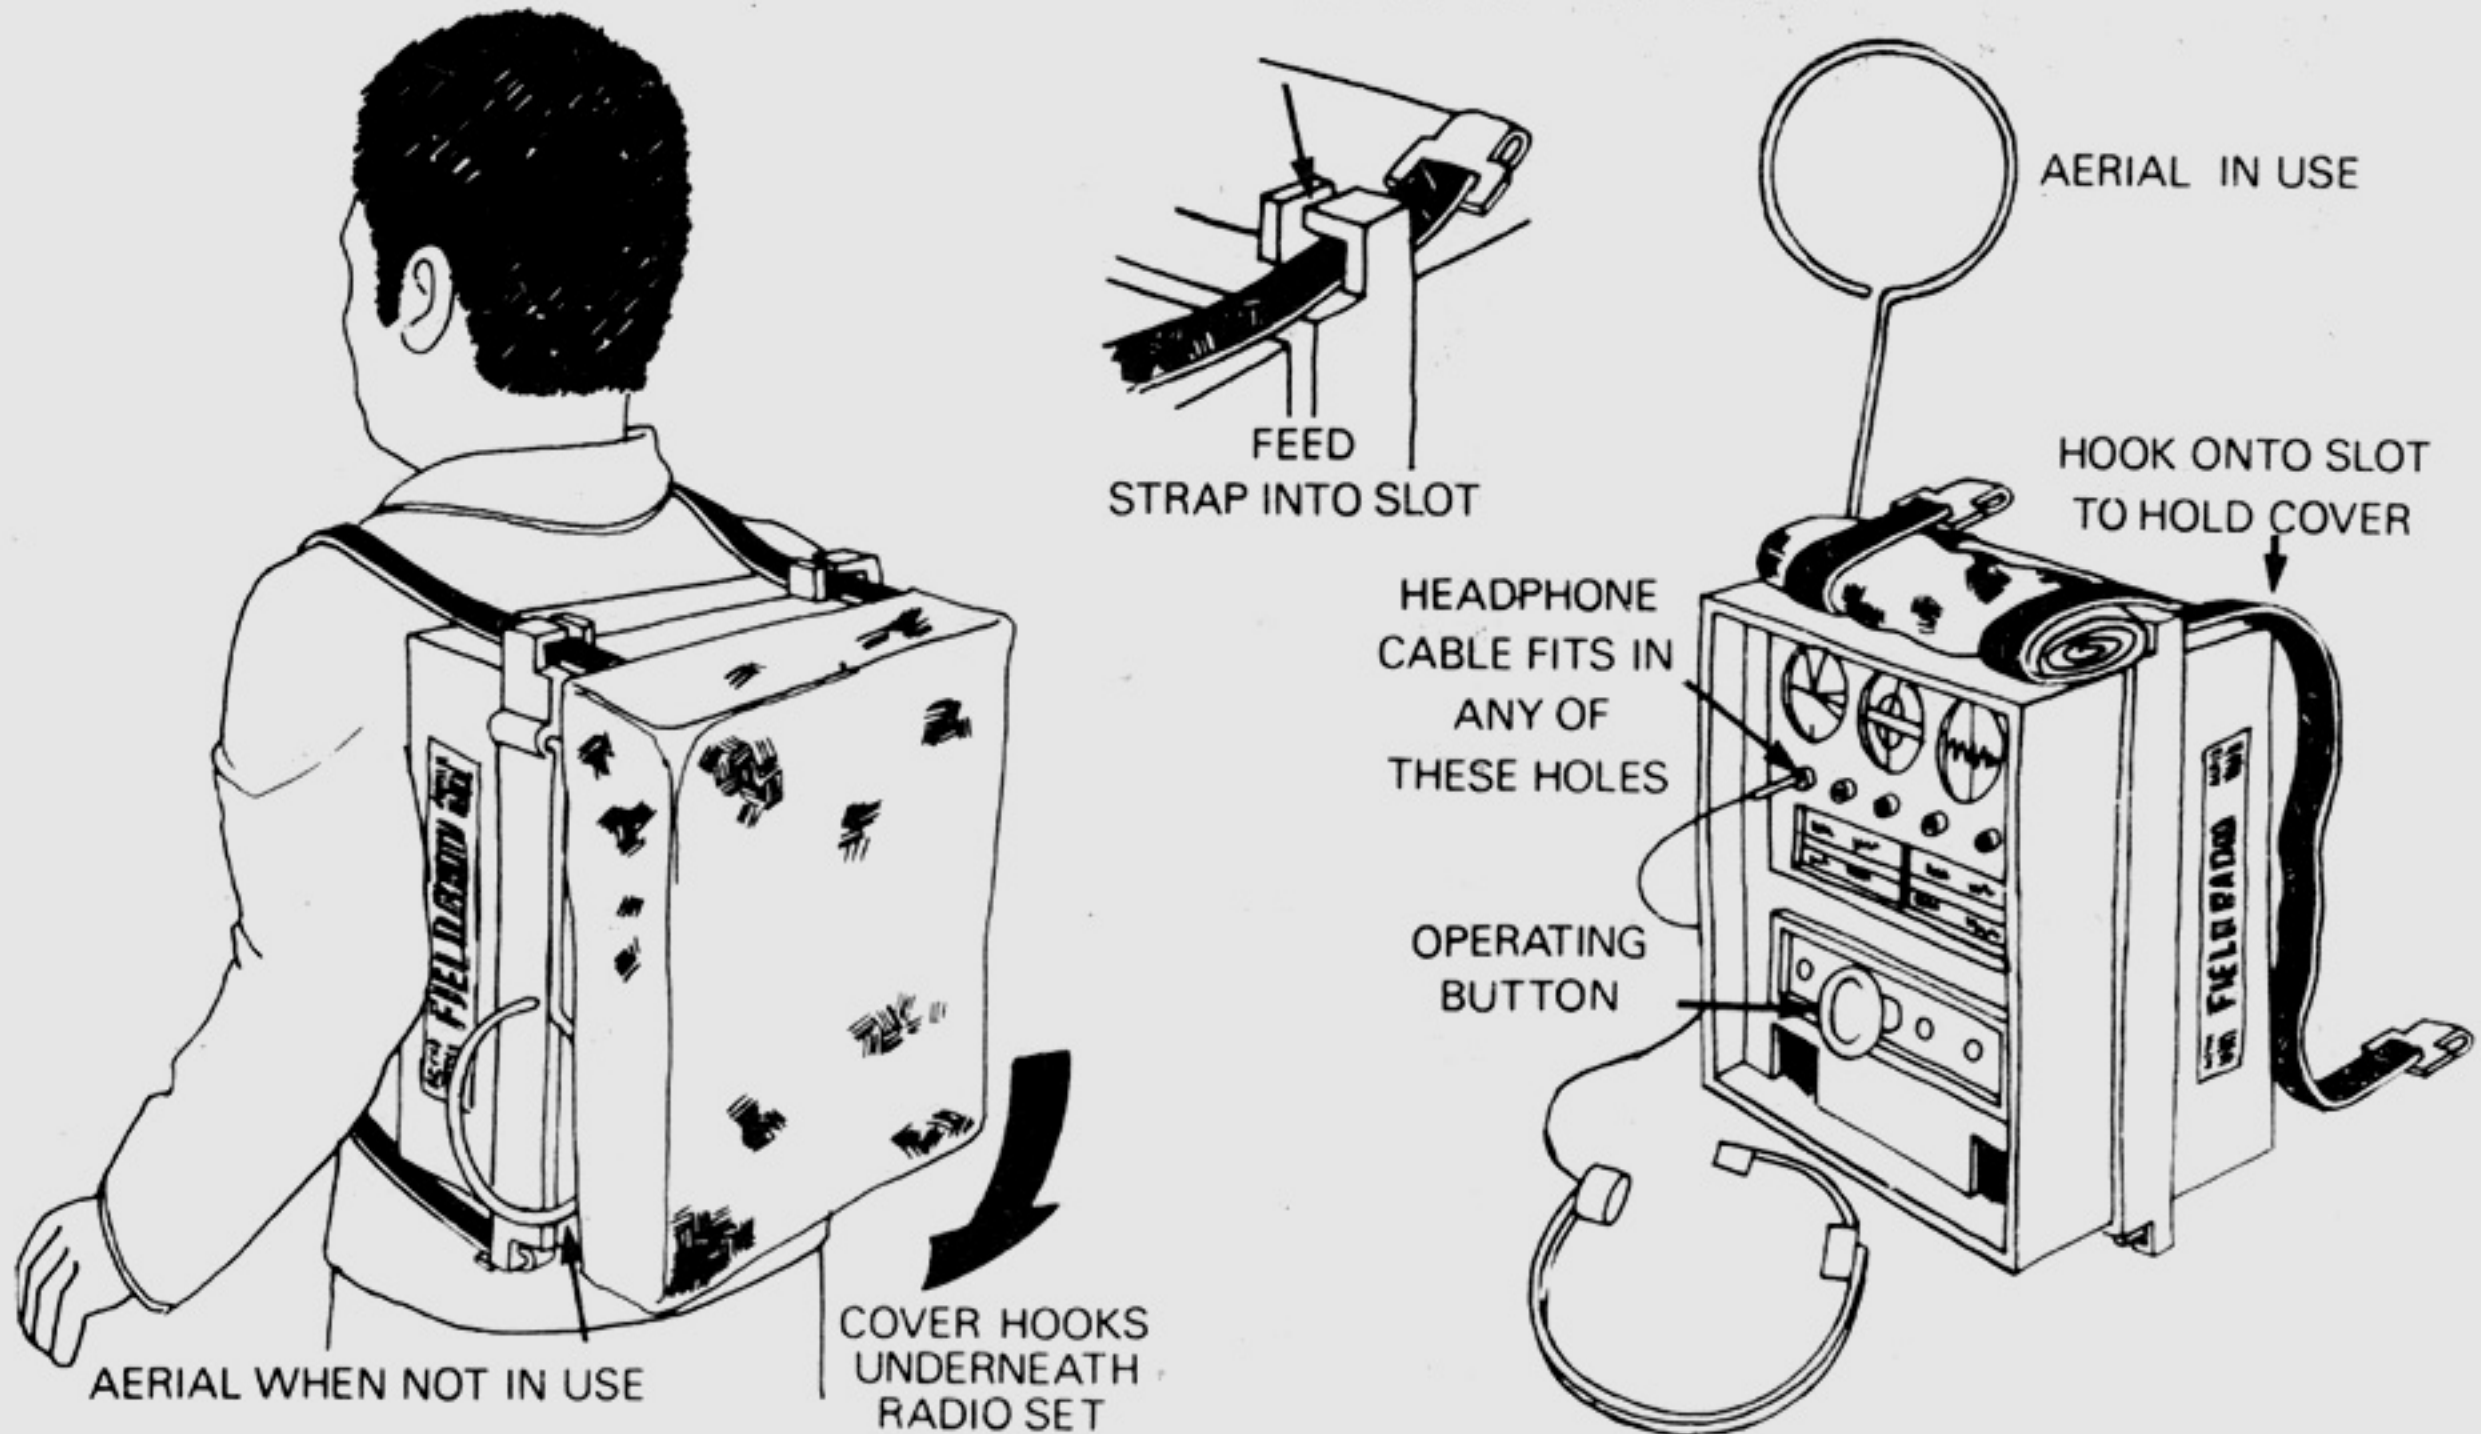

The Field Commander wears combat-style officer's uniform and can be any rank (choose from the insignia provided.)
